RIPLEY,

[From the Louisville Commercial.] Several years ago the Episcopal ()rphanage, on Fifth street, took charge of a very interesting and beautiful young girl named Mary Belle Hendrich, and as she developed into womanhood she hecame a great favorite with the members who had charge of the Institution, and her handsome features and pleasant manners won for her bosts of friends everywhere. When her 18th birthday rolled around, some of the ladles began to look out in search of a good home for the orphane girl, and after some time they found the desired place at Hickman, Kentucky. DESOTO, Everything was put in readiness, and with general ferlings of regret among those who had cared for, and protected her, she bade them an adlen on Easter Monday and started out to battle with the world and to come in contact with its trials, its tribulations and its myriad of eins that are so often concealed beneath the velvely cloak of deception. The ladies of the Orphanage placed the young girl in charge of the Captain of the steamer J. D. Parker, and she started for her new home with many found antisipations of the future. On the boat Mary met many new faces and formed a traveling acquaintance with many persons. Among them was a woman from Cincinnati named Mattie Strassner. This woman, by her attention to the young girl, soon won her affection, and she little dreamed that by the pretended friendship she was gradually being drawn into a whirlpool of sin from the dark depths of which no voyager ever returns. The Cincinnati woman was going lovisit a brother in Missourl, and by making many flattering promises to the girl she got her consent to get off the boat with her at a point this side of. Hickman. The Captain of the boat protested, but the girl, being unacquainted with the world, thought she had discovered the object she desired in her newly formed friend; and accompanied her to the residence of the biother. The minister who was going to adopt Miss Henrich, at Hickman, and furnish her with a home, heard of the affair, and at once telegraphed to her friends in this city. On the up trip of the Parker the woman Strassner, having completed her visit bearded the hear ing completed her visit, boarded the boat in company with her victim, and regis-tered for Cinclunati.

It was evidently her intention to take Miss Henrich to Cincinnati and there every art known to these dangerous women, who are responsible for the ruin of girl was as yet unharmed and as she had who resides on the corner of Pifteenth and Columbia streets. The good work had its desired effect, and yesterday moruing when the Parker landed here Officers Quast and Thixton boarded the boat, and the Captain's feelings were greatly relieved when he introduced them to Miss Hendrich. They soon made their busi-ness known, and informed the girl that they had instructions from the Orphanage to convey her to the home of her grand nother on Columbia street. Sho at first hesitated about going with them, and said she believed Miss Strassner to be a lady. than death, and it seems that a kind Providence intervoned to save this young girl from ruin.
